HE KNEW HER MAN

The man in the story was a funny-faced individual that wore a derby hat, large baggy trousers and big shoes, in fact it could be said he resembled a well known movie star.

At first, as in the case of any good story everything goes bad for Charlie—he tries to steal an automobile and gets the cops after him. Then he tries to get a free ride and has no luck.

It is then that he meets our heroine the beautiful Kitty Cat, and it is a case of love at first sight. Charles serenades her at night, then they decide to elope, they escape just before the farmer is able to discover that his female pet is leaving him.

They jump in an automobile, standing close by and are off. This particular car has little Cupid standing erect on the radiator, but he soon wakes up sweeps back shoots his arrows.

By and by as the way in all good stories. The farmer's house is becoming overrun with ~~mischievous~~ ^{MISCHIEVOUS} mice and they have just about driven him dizzy. One day his doorbell rings and he is again greeted by his old-time pet, she has come to introduce her husband. The farmer forgives them, they all shake hands and are happy, when a crowd of possibly forty million kittens all the living image of the manly husband, break in to greet the farmer, he runs for his life and liberty. The moral is:- "The rich get richer and the poor get children."
